Annales de L Institut Pasteur, June, 1896. V. Morax (Paris). Sub-acute Conjunctivitis: a Clinical and Bacteriological Study. Annales d Oculistique, January, 1897. Th. Axenfeld (Breslau). Chronic Diplo-bacillus Conjunctivitis. Centr. f. Bakter. Parasitenkunde und Infektions Krankh., Band xxi., 1897, No 1. The conjunctival affection described by Morax and Axenfeld adds to the comparatively small list of eye diseases of microbic origin, in which there seems little doubt that the micro-organism has been identified. The clinical features of this form of conjunctivitis are very similarly described by both writers; they do not differ materially from those of mild catarrhal conjunctivitis. The symptoms come on without apparent cause; both eyes are affected but not always simultaneously and not always equally; in the eye first attacked the inflammation is usually more severe. There are slight photophobia and lacrymation; the lid margins, especially near the canthi, become red, but there is no tendency to glandular disturbance; there is, particularly at night, yellowish rather tenacious secretion. The palpebral conjunctiva shows very little swelling, but considerable hyperaemia. The ocular conjunctiva is involved, if at all, only in its peripheral part. No complications have been observed, except the development of a phlyctenule (containing bacilli) in one case, and there seems no tendency for an extension of the inflammation to adjoining mucous membranes. The disease is essentially...
