INTRODUCTION Polychlorinated dibenzo-p-dioxins (PCDDs), dibenzofurans (PCDFs), and biphenyls (PCBs) (Figure 1) are persistent bioaccumulative contaminants that are found ubiquitously in environmental matrices, including tissues of fish, birds, and mammals. The most well-studied chemical in this group is 2, 3, 7, 8-tetrachlorodibenzo-p-dioxin (2, 3, 7, 8-TCDD). Demonstrated toxic effects of 2, 3, 7, 8-TCDD in fish, birds, and mammals include adverse effects on reproduction, development, and endocrine functions; wasting syndrome; immunotoxicity; and mortality. Several PCDDs, PCDFs, and PCBs have been shown to cause toxic responses similar to 2, 3, 7, 8-TCDD, in both laboratory and field situations. In this document, the term dioxin-like effects is used to refer to those effects that are similar to those caused by 2, 3, 7, 8-TCDD, and the term dioxin-like chemicals is used to refer to chemicals that exert such effects through binding to the aryl hydrocarbon receptor...
