The great accumulation of observed zenith distances of stars for latitudes, and of observed transits for longitudes in the geodetic survey of India, gave rise to the conviction that the material thus laboriously collected might be utilized for compiling a star catalogue, a conviction which has resulted in the publication of the accompanying list of star-places for January, 1892, with the necessary constants for the reduction of their places to other epochs. In order that the method by which the latitude and longitude observations were employed in the construction of the catalogue may be understood, a few introductory remarks seem necessary. To begin with the Right Ascensions. These are purely differential, that is to say they are obtained by measurement of the difference of Right Ascension of the catalogued star and of some adjacent Nautical Almanac star observed with it; the latter being considered for the purposes of this Catalogue as errorless. For convenience of reference the name of the comparison Nautical Almanac star or stars thus employed is entered in the fifth column of the Catalogue. In determining differences of longitude in India with the help of the electric telegraph, the method adopted as being the most direct and trustworthy was to record at both stations, by one and the...
