The changing date of the holiday fluctuates from January to February on today's calendar because, as with all traditional Chinese holidays, it follows the lunar calendar. This tradition can be seen throughout parts of Asia and is not limited to just the mainland of China. Additionally, there are even other countries with a significant Chinese population that also observe this holiday and then there are other Asian cultures, such as Japan and Korea, that also celebrate this time of year. The Chinese New Year often times refers to the 15 days of celebration at the beginning of the traditional Chinese calendar and synonymous with the Chinese Spring Festival. However, at times the Chinese New...
