Excerpt: . sador to Henry VIII., was to have set out for England on the following morning, with a colleague named Piero Pasqualigo; and when the Senate assembled on the 27th December for the purpose of replacing him, the election fell on Sebastian Giustinian. He requested time to consider until the morrow, and then accepted the post, demanding, however, an increase of salary, as he understood it would behove him to evince greater hospitality, and to make more display, in England than elsewhere, He also expressed a wish, ere departing, to finish the trial of the ex-Count of Sebenico, whom he had accused of improper intimacy with a nun and another lady of Illyria, and also of having murdered a barber. How he disposed of this strange delinquent is not said. The instructions under which Sebastian Giustinian acted in his English embassage, will be found...
